

'AH, THERE, PRINCE!
'MORNING, JUDGE!
'HOW'S YOUR CELL?'

Annual Court Room Dialogue
Repeated, Because "Prince Ranji's" in Bad Again.

The light of flickering matches in the vestibule of No. 27 East Forty-second street disclosed a startling sight to passers-by before daylight to-day. Three men were bending over the form of a fourth, a man plainly of Oriental birth. They stirred him with their feet and shook him. A horrified witness ran and told Policeman Gunn about it. Gunn looked upon the features of the prostrate man and sighed wearily.

"Again?" said he. For it was Joe Smile, the curly cook, who more than once has fooled London, New York and Montreal into believing he is Prince Ranji, son of the Amir of Beloochistan. Indeed, there are times when he seems to believe it himself.

"He doesn't belong here," said the three men who were looking him over. "Please take him away."

GIRLS DIDN'T FIGURE IN 'PRINCE'S' ESCAPE THIS TIME.

With the aid of another policeman, Gunn carried Smile to the East Fifty-first street station. He had recovered consciousness by court time and was able to walk out to the patrol wagon unassisted and to leave it with dignity to appear before Magistrate Herbert in Yorkville Court. His unworldly highness knows his way about police courts.

The records show that for four years the occurrence of last night has been almost an annual event with him. And always, when he wakes up, he asserts, he is the real Prince Ranji, son of the Amir of Beloochistan, and that he has been robbed of large sums of money and jewelry. This time, he said, thieves had taken his fur overcoat and fur hat.

His tale, to-day, lacked only the usual accompaniment of naughty young women, who had persuaded him to depart from abstemiousness. Girls did it in April, 1910, and in 1910, but he doesn't remember there were any girls in it last night; only that a pleasing stranger asked him to join him in a drink at the bar of the Hotel Belmont. They had two he said—and then he woke up in the station.

He had missed his train for Oceana, where, he said, he had a magnificent hotel from which he comes in every day to his Oriental grocery in Forty-second street, and was so disgusted with himself that he thought a drink would cheer him up. Magistrate Herbert let him go with his sorrows.

JOE HAS HAD SOME CAREER EVEN FOR A PRINCE.

Joe Smile left Sherry's twelve years ago. Joe Smile, who had been discovered by Officer Teale in Thompson street, left Sherry's twelve years ago, and later made the most spectacular re-entry into this country ever made by any cook but one—and that was Doc Cook. He sailed from London to America, and landed in New York, where he became a "prince" of the "retinue," including a corps of "hanging girls." They were dressed with gorgeous splendor. Arrogant was no name for them. They took a special train to this city and their progress was as royal as that of Prince Henry, a little later. For two days the newspapers dwelt on the great honor Prince Ranji had conferred on the town. And then he blantly made it plain that he meant to open a curry restaurant opposite the Waldorf. It was opened, glowed with gilt-lamps and red hangings and shining brass lamps for awhile, and then went into bankruptcy. The former retinue were the waiters, cashiers, dishwashers and the like. It lacked patrons.

Joe went to work as a cook again in several restaurants and hotels. And every once in a while he goes out and meets a new acquaintance and drinks and becomes unspeakably wealthy and a prince again.
